heavers up to the proudest commander who stood upon the bridge.

He had not been for Sampson; he had not been for Schley, he said, but rather for the American navy, which was greater than any one man, any two men, or set of men; and when it was sought to prolong the controversy it only did harm to that valuable arm of the public service.

He trusted that every man who was in the legislation. He trusted that every man who was in the fight would some day have his due credit. Mr. Williams was then recognized. He said he had listened with admiration to the tribute to the muse of history by Mr. Foss, but the trouble was that the muse of history had been writing the names of those who did not take part in the battle of Santiago, and she had been trying to leave out the names of those who did.

"Do you think the muse of history had anything so do with it?" asked Mr. Foss.

A Naval Muse.

"Well," responded Mr. Williams, "a little naval muse by the name of Maclay did, and the Navy Department and the Committee on Naval Affairs have been accepting it to a large extent."

Mr. Williams then again turned his attention to Admiral Crowinshield. Since name of an improper person. When ought this controversy to cease, Mr. Williams asked; and then answering the question said it was when every miserable scoundrel who had read and approved the proofs of Maclay's book and encouraged him to write Schley down as a coward and a liar had been called because of the greatest naval commanders in American history.

No one in the countrol had ever read or approved the proof try, he said, thought Schley was a cowsheets of Maclay's book.

"Then why has be not said so in public," demanded Mr. Williams. "Why is it that he has never asked for a court-martial for himself when the allegation was made against him, to vindicate himself?"

Referring to Mr. Foss' statement that the controversy should cease, Mr. Willisms said that despite the ukase from the White House and the pronunciamento from the Committee on Naval Affairs, it was impossible to prevent the American absorble from expressing an opinion when Referring to Mr. Poss' statement that

Mr. Williams replied that he had the same information that every other American citizen had, that nothing had been done with them, that it was the intention of the committee to do nothing with them except to kill them. Mr. Poss asked if the Court of Inquiry had not decided the case. Mr. Williams said that was one of the unfortunate things that was absolutely true.

HON, EUGENE F. WARE,

SIX MEN VICTIMS OF NEGRO'S DEADLY AIM

He saw that Grant was dead and then walked back to where the crowds were waiting.

standing by a window trying to shoot him and so he fired at him. Immediately before Covington fired at Richardson, however, the negro landed a bullet in his last man. It struck E. T. Jackson, a street car man, in the right hip. Jackson was stand-ing fully 200 yards from where Richardson While waiting for Richardson's place of refuge to burn, the officers searched surrounding negroes' houses, thinking he might have fied to one for protection. The As the crowd stood waiting, two negroes jumped from the mouth of a sewer within twenty-five feet of where the officers and citizens were gathered. They came directly toward the crowd with evident intention of mingling with those who were stand-ing around. An excited man announced that he had seen the negroes come from the sewer, and immediately the negroes began running.

Shot Fleeing Men.

One was within a few feet of the crowd and a citizen emptied the contents of boin harrels of a double-barreled shotgun into his back. The negro kept on running is about a hundred yards from where he had been shot, and was lying in the ditch in on unconscious condition and apparently dying as the crowd stood above him. Some wanted to fire into his body, but were prevented by the officers. He is now at the Grady Hospital. The other negro was also shot as he attempted to escape. He also left a red trail behind him. He went first to a house on McDaniel Street, where he knocked wildly, but the negroes who lived there were evidently afraid to let the wounded man in. He left a pool of blood upon the floor of the porch. He then went around the house. Many thought he had gone un-der the house, but he was soon discovered lying in a hog pen.

The crowd collected here. About thirty men with Winchesters and pistols sur-rounded the prostrate negro, and for fif-teen minutes fired bullets into the body

REVIEW OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON

Commanders Put Through Severe Firing Tests.

Admiral Dewey's Theory-More Money Needed for Target Practice-Electric Machinery Effective.

IORFOLK, Va., May 17.-Reports on the review of the North Atlantic Squadron off the Virginia capes show that several interesting theories were worked outamong them one which was put in practice by Admiral Dewcy. From the deck of the dispatch boat Delphin he issued orders to the fleet putting it through a series of complicated and difficult tactics, calculated to test the ability of each ship's commander so to maneuver his vessel as to preserve a strategic advantage over the enemy, and at the same time not to interfere with the fire of his fellows of the squadron.

To this end, each captain was ordered to consider the Dolphin as the enemy, and to work his vessel so as to maintain t within the most effective zone of fire. Meanwhile the Dolphin pursued an erratic course in and out of the fleet, doubling as often and as sharply as possible. As the Dolphin has a speed of only twelve knots, the test was not as severe as it might have proved with a swifter vessel, but the reviewing authorities declared themselves well pleased with the

New Ideas in Target Practice.

Lieut, A. P. Niblack was present in his capacity of inspector of squadron target practice, and had his first opportunity to ry his new system of firing at moving targets. About a year ago it was discovered that there was a serious deficiency in the funds available for the ordnance division of the navy. The North Atlantic squadron in one cruise had consumed and escort her to Annapolis. The cere-more ammunition than had been allotted to the entire navy for a year, and one vessel in that squadron had shot away more in practice than was intended for the whole naval unit. While no blame was attached to the commanders for their zeal in perfecting the marksmanship of their ships' crews, it was thought advisable to exercise a closer supervision over this costly detail, and the office to which Lieutenant Niblack is assigned was pro-

He brought some orig-inal ideas to this new work, and it is ex-pected that many of these will be em-bodied in the regulations for target prac-tice which he will probably submit along with his forthcoming report upon the tar-get practice of the squadron just held.

More Liberal Allowance Needed.

President Roosevelt, while Assistant erretary of the Navy, was insistent upon the necessity of actual practice in gun fire, and the same idea was prominent in his address to the graduates at An-The suggestion is, therefore, napolis. warranted that he will urge Congress to grant a more liberal allowance in future for this sort of work. Meanwhile Lieutenant Niblack's labors will be confined to systematizing and making more effective the limited amount at the disposal of the navy.

One matter pointed out by the luspetor as a result of his experience at the Virginia capes is the superiority of electricity over steam as a motive power in moving ship's machinery. The Kearsarge was the vessel particularly selected for this demonstration. It was shown con-clusively that while gun turrets revolved by steam power oscillated perceptibly, to the loss of time and consequent effective-ness of the battery, those moved by elec-tricity, whether of the single or superthe eye. The same superiority was like-wise noted in a drill given by the Kearwas made in the work, and there was iso an unusual degree of precision.

To Meet the Gaulois.

Orders have been sent to the North At lantic Squadron to remain at Hampton Roads until May 29. On that date the ships will proceed to meet the French battleship Gaulois at Lynn Haven Bay, nony there concluded, the ships will be sent to the Brooklyn Navy Tard and other yards along the Atlantic Coast for a general overhauling, preparatory to the summer cruise off the New England seaboard. Most of the work will be done at Brooklyn, although it is probable that the Olympia will go to Boston. The work to be done consists mostly of docking and cleaning and some minor repairs, and it is estimated that it can be completed on this station, the Brooklyn will join after its duty at the inauguration of President Palma at Havana is over, and the Cincinnati will also join the command as soon as it can be spared from service
